

"They're in the Air"Families Weep, Sing At Word of Freedom

The Associated Press
NEW YORK — The families of the American hostages cheered, wept and sang Tuesday as word came that their loved ones finally had been set free.

"My present is on the way," said Mary Needham, celebrating her 49th birthday in Bellevue, Neb., on Tuesday with news that her son, Paul Needham, was coming home.

"He's not a hostage!" exclaimed Hazel Lee of Pasadena, Calif., mother of Gary Lee.

"They're in the air," added her husband, Earl, as the couple took off their hostage bracelets and tossed them on the coffee table.

The Lees had worn the bracelets, bearing their son's name, to mark the captivity.

In Homer, Ill., Phil Lewis, father of embassy guard Sgt. Paul Lewis, shouted to a houseful of friends and relatives: "The damn birds are in the air."

In homes all across the nation, families wept and cheered after news reports indicated the hostages had left Tehran and the State Department called to confirm it.

Reunion Plans
Most of the families said they would wait to hear from their loved ones before making reunion plans, but homecoming preparations were stepped up.

Barbara Timm of Oak Creek, Wis., the mother of hostage Kevin Hermening, said "these last 24 hours were longer than the first 14 months. But it's just a relief. They're free."

Others still were skeptical, wary that their hopes would be dashed as they have been before.

"I won't believe it until I see them land," Vivian Homeyer, sister of hostage Kathryn Koob, said.

Offensive Sputters

military officials may see as an endorsement of their past, often extraordinarily brutal practices.

The pressure is also being taken off the military to negotiate a peaceful solution to the chronic political carnage, critics say. But the government at least has said repeatedly that it is willing to negotiate while the guerrillas of the National Liberation Front and their political allies in the Revolutionary Democratic Front continue to say they will not deal with this government, but only with the United States.

Both U.S. and Salvadoran officials say they regard this as a tactic to undermine the government, not a serious proposal.

In the propaganda war outside the country the left is claiming this was never intended to be a final offensive and there were no deadlines set despite the flat announcements by guerrilla leaders in recent weeks that Ronald Reagan would be presented with an irreversible military situation in El Salvador by inauguration day.

In a sense they appear to have been right. The Salvadoran Army, with its new American equipment and its confidence bolstered by the last two weeks of fighting, is apparently stronger than ever.

at a gathering in Wellsburg, Iowa, that included Ms. Koob's mother and father.

"We're delighted, but we're very cautious," said Bonnie Graves of Reston, Va., wife of hostage John Graves.

Family Circle
The eight members of hostage Michael Moeller's immediate family linked hands in a circle in front of their television set in Loup City, Neb., and joined tearfully in singing "America the Beautiful" with the presidential inauguration participants.

"A great burden has been lifted off my heart," Doris Moeller said as she later raised a glass to toast her 29-year-old son. "Here's to Mike. I'm glad we're able to drink to him."

"They're in the air, mother?" Steven Morefield shouted in the San Diego home of hostage Richard Morefield.

"Now it's true. Now we can rejoice," said Dorothea Morefield, the hostage's wife. "They're coming home and they're coming home with honor and pride."

"All of a sudden there's a future ahead," added Dan Morefield, the Morefields' 21-year-old son. "It's time to start to celebrate."

"We're convinced," said Linda Golacinski after officials called her Silver Spring, Md., home with word that the plane carrying the hostages — one of whom is Ms. Golacinski's brother, Allan — had left Iran.

"It's kind of a madhouse here," she added. "Neighbors are coming over and we're having champagne."

Sirens and whistles filled the air over Olyphant, Pa., when Harry and Alice Metrinko, parents of hostage Michael Metrinko, got the State Department call. Mr. Metrinko, who turned 70 on Monday, embraced his weeping wife.

"She's got tears in her eyes with happiness," he said.

Mr. Metrinko then called Mayor John Chichilla and said: "They're in the air."

"Great," the mayor said. "We're going to make some noise for you."

Blasts and whistles soon were heard and neighbors who had waited since dawn began singing "God Bless America."

"I knew it would come," Mrs. Metrinko said. "I'm just glad I lived this long to see this."

S. Korean Court To Rule on Kim

SEOUL — South Korea's Supreme Court will deliver its decision Friday on the appeal of dissident leader Kim Dae Jung, sentenced to death for plotting to overthrow the government, Mr. Kim's lawyer said Tuesday.

If convicted, Mr. Kim can appeal to President Chun Doo Hwan as a last resort.

Mr. Kim, 56, was given the death sentence by a military court in September for plotting to overthrow the government through student-led uprisings. He was a leading presidential candidate before his arrest on May 17, 1980, when South Korea's military rulers expanded martial law to crack down on corruption and political dissent.

Dorothea Morefield, the wife of hostage Richard Morefield, welcomed friends to have champagne at her home in San Diego when it appeared that the release of the hostages was imminent.

Freed Hostages Leave Iran for Home

Mr. Reagan, perhaps reflecting the second part of the announcement, said he understood that the plane had left at 12:33.

The release followed feverish bargaining sessions which, with Algeria acting as intermediary, brought agreement on a deal involving the return of more than $8 billion in Iranian assets frozen by the United States after the Americans were taken hostage.

Earlier Doubts on Talks
The takeoff from Tehran's airport followed hectic hours when the success of the negotiations was plunged into doubt by what the Americans called a technical hitch in financial talks and what the Iranians termed an "underhanded maneuver" by U.S. banks.

The release agreement had been signed Monday morning and expectations that the hostages would be freed immediately rose steadily throughout the day.

Then came disclosure of the new complications, but that was thrust aside with the announcement Tuesday that Iranian assets had been transferred from the United States to a special Algerian bank account in London.

Soon afterward, there were reports from Iran of increasing activity at Tehran's airport, where the two Algerian jets had been waiting for hours to take the hostages off.

First the six Algerian doctors who had flown to Iran earlier this week to examine the hostages were seen leaving their hotel for the airport. "It's finished. They're saying goodbye, they're about to be freed," a doctor said of the hostages in a talk with reporters.

Disputed Document
Behzad Nabavi, Iran's chief hostage negotiator, was at Tehran's airport as the hostages left. Mr. Nabavi's declarations on the crisis during the last few days had added to the drama. After having announced a final agreement, he charged that the United States had used an "underhanded maneuver," and the hostages' release was delayed further.

Mr. Nabavi contended Monday that the American banks had presented an 11-page appendix to an agreement that had been reached early Sunday morning. He asserted that the appendix required Iran to drop any further claims against the banks beyond the approximately $8 billion that was to be placed in an escrow account at the Bank of England.

He said, contradicting the terms of the agreement. In a statement issued Monday evening, Citibank declared that the banks had no part in the disputed appendix. "The banks weren't party to it and had no part in its drafting," a Citibank spokesman said.

The Citibank statement did not, however, deny Mr. Nabavi's assertion that the appendix dealt with disputes between the 12 major banks and Iran, nor did it deny that the banks worked closely with the Carter administration officials who drafted the appendix.

China Indicates It Will Not Kill Jiang, 9 Others

PEKING — China indicated publicly Tuesday that it will spare the lives of Jiang Qing and nine other defendants accused of treason.

The official indication was carried in a lengthy Chinese news agency article by one of the country's top legislators, Liu Fuzhi, the deputy director of the parliamentary commission on legislative affairs.

Mr. Liu discussed in detail both the crimes and possible punishments against Mao's widow and the other defendants. He said the accused, including Miss Jiang, could be sentenced to death by law for some of the crimes they allegedly committed during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution.

But he then added, "however, Article 43 states that a death penalty may be suspended for two years during which time the prisoners will be helped to reform through labor." It was the first time since the end of the trial that China has given such a clear indication of the possible sentences to be imposed.

Legislators Vow Probe On Hostages

Full Study to Include Safety of U.S. Envoys

By Martin Tolchin
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Republican and Democratic leaders in both the House and Senate have pledged congressional investigations of the circumstances that led to the kidnapping of 52 Americans held hostage in Iran, as part of a larger inquiry into the problems of protecting American diplomats abroad.

Their statements were made as members of Congress expressed gratitude and relief on an agreement for the release of the American hostages.

For the moment the hearings were in an early, formative stage and there was no indication that they would focus on whether the Carter administration was in any way responsible for the hostages being seized by Iranian militants.

Rather, as now being discussed, the hearings would focus on security procedures used to guard American embassies. But this line of inquiry could lead the congressional committees back into exploring the security measures taken by the Carter administration immediately before the seizure of the hostages.

Responses Sought
Sen. Howard Baker Jr. of Tennessee, the Republican leader, said that there undoubtedly would be a congressional investigation of the hostage crisis as part of a broad inquiry into alternative responses to such actions.

"We've got to think now of a policy for the future protection of our diplomats abroad," Sen. Baker said before the Senate convened. "We would focus on a visible, understandable, public policy for our country," he added.

He said the inquiry would not be limited to the hostage crisis. "We've had other experiences in other areas, and we certainly should take them into account," Sen. Baker said.

In recent years, the U.S. ambassador to Afghanistan was assassinated, the U.S. Embassy in Pakistan was burned, and the U.S. Embassy in Libya damaged.

Sen. Baker said the inquiry probably would be conducted by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, with the possible help of the Armed Services and Commerce Committees.

Similar Situation
Meanwhile, Rep. Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said "there will be hearings to determine all the facts concerning Iran, and how a similar situation can be avoided."

The inquiry, which would begin late next month or early March, would focus on steps to attain "security of diplomats abroad," Rep. Zablocki added.

Speaker Thomas O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., when asked about the planned investigation, said, "that's one of the prerogatives of the committee."

Speaking of the hostage crisis, Rep. O'Neill added that "those things do happen, and maybe we'd better be better prepared in the embassies."

Gromyko Warns On Change in SALT Principles

MOSCOW — The Soviet Union will not participate in new SALT-2 talks with the United States if they are designed to change the basic principles of the arms limitation plan, according to a forthcoming policy article by Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

Writing in the Communist Party journal Kommunist, Mr. Gromyko did not, however, directly rule out the prospect of further discussions of the arms limitation treaty. Excerpts from the article were distributed by Tass on Monday.

Aides to President Reagan have said that his incoming administration would seek to renegotiate the agreement to correct what it sees as disadvantages to the United States. Some Western diplomats believe that the Russians might agree to "cosmetic" changes if they are needed to get the treaty ratified in the U.S. Senate.

"The Soviet Union cannot and will not take part in negotiations aimed at crossing out the SALT-2 agreement and breaking down the basic principles on which this treaty was concluded and on which the SALT-1 agreement is based and now functions," Mr. Gromyko said, according to the Tass excerpts.

"SALT-2 concerns extremely important aspects of the security of the Soviet Union and the United States," Mr. Gromyko added. "And, for our country, any approach that would put one side in an advantageous position over the other is categorically unacceptable."

Turkey Party Leader Free of Drug Charge

ANKARA — Necmettin Erbakan, the leader of Turkey's Moslem fundamentalist National Salvation Party, was acquitted Tuesday of a charge of trafficking in heroin.

However, Mr. Erbakan, 55, will remain in custody to face another trial on charges of having violated electioneering laws and Turkey's secular constitution. The second charge carries a maximum penalty of death.

Final Transfer
The transfer to the escrow account was completed and Algerian intermediaries finished the process by officially informing Iran that the transfer had taken place. All that remained was the actual departure of the Americans from Tehran.

Finally the hostages were allowed to leave and a humiliating chapter in American history drew to a close.

WORLD NEWS BRIEFSouth Africa Bans Largest Black Newspaper

The Associated Press
JOHANNESBURG — The Post, South Africa's largest newspaper blacks with a circulation of 181,000, was effectively banned Tuesday by the white minority government.

The newspaper's parent company was warned that The Post, a critic of the government and apartheid, would be banned. Attempts were made to put it on the street. The company had no immediate comment.

The Post, which circulated in Soweto and other black areas, was published since October after being hit by a strike. Because the paper did not appear for 30 days, it lost its license. Tuesday's government action came in response to attempts to get the newspaper re-issued. The government gave no reason for its decision.

Russia Accused of Crackdown on Dissidents

Reuters
LONDON — Amnesty International Tuesday accused the Soviet Union of carrying out a sustained crackdown in which more than 200 dissidents had been imprisoned over the last 15 months.

In recent months, the Soviet courts have been handing down sentences, up to 15 years of combined imprisonment and interest in the London-based human rights organization said.

The group said most of the dissidents were either persons who monitor the Helsinki human rights accords, campaigners for non-Russian Soviet citizens such as Ukrainians, Estonians and Latvians, or members of religious groups such as Baptists, Seventh-Day Adventists and Pentacostals.

BANGKOK — Japanese Premier Zenko Suzuki left Bangkok Tuesday, ending a major tour of the countries of the Associated Southeast Asian Nations that reinforced Japan's interest and influence in the region.

At each stop on his tour, Mr. Suzuki reaffirmed Japan's political and economic commitment to the regional grouping, which is made up of Thailand, Malaysia, Indonesia, the Philippines and Singapore. Each country he also was careful to note that Japan's role would be military.

Of particular interest to Japan and the ASEAN nations is bringing to the military occupation of Cambodia by Vietnam. Mr. Suzuki said Tuesday that Japan would seek a United Nations-sponsored peace on the question.

Vesco to Stay in Bahamas Pending Appeal

United Press International
NASSAU, Bahamas — Financier Robert Vesco, under a deportation order to leave the Bahamas Tuesday, will be allowed to remain under the country's Cabinet acts on his appeal. Government spokesmen said there is no telling how long that could be.

"So far as I know, there is nothing in the Immigration Act that gives how soon the Cabinet has to act on an appeal," Bill Kalis, a spokesman for the Bahamas News Bureau, said Monday. "Until the Cabinet acts on that appeal, [Mr. Vesco] will be permitted to stay pending expiration date."

Mr. Vesco, 45, who fled from the United States in 1972 to prosecution on securities fraud and Watergate-related charges, has been in the Bahamas since 1978. Last November, the Bahamian government revoked his residency permit and earlier this month he was served the deportation order, which he appealed.

Iran Denies It Will Attend Islamic Meeting

Reuters
TAIF, Saudi Arabia — Iran was reported Tuesday to have declined its boycott of the Islamic foreign ministers' conference here Iranian spokesman quickly denied it.

Saudi Foreign Minister Prince Saud Al-Faisal told reporters conference, which is expected to close Wednesday, that Iran he official word that it had reversed its decision to stay away.

But Iran's ambassador to Kuwait, Ali Shams Ardekani, said in a phone interview that Iran was not going to attend the meeting summit conference beginning on Sunday. He said hopes that Iran lifted its boycott were due to a misunderstanding in Taif.

Reagan Promises to Put America 'Back to Work' fer from the longest and one of the worst sustained inflations in our national history which distorts our economic decisions, penalizes thrift and crushes the struggling young and the fixed-income elderly alike....

"Idle industries have cast workers into unemployment, human misery and personal indignity. Those who do work are denied a fair return for their labor by a tax system which penalizes successful achievement and keeps us from maintaining full productivity."

Mr. Reagan declared that the nation was "faced as some would have us believe, doomed to an inevitable decline. I do not believe in a fate that will fall on us no matter what we do. I do believe in a fate that will fall on us if we do nothing."

President Carter, in his farewell speech last week, warned against "special interest groups" that worked against the general welfare in favor of their private objectives.

Mr. Reagan, for his part, said Tuesday, "Our concern must be for a special interest group that has been too long neglected. It knows no sectional boundaries, crosses ethnic and racial divisions and political party lines."

"It is made up of men and women who raise our food, patrol our streets, man our mines and factories, teach our children, keep our homes and heal us when we're sick. Professionals, industrialists, shopkeepers, clerks, cabbies and truck drivers."

They are, in short, "We the people."

He pledged to "curb the size and influence of the Federal establishment" to overcome "the intrusion and intrusion in our lives have resulted from unmet and excessive growth of government."

Listing his "first priorities," Reagan said: "It is time to re-emerge back within its means to lighten our punitive tax burden."

He said: "Our objective is a healthy, vigorous, growing economy that provides equal opportunities for all Americans — barriers born of bigotry or discrimination."

U.S. Offers to $2 Billion in A To Saudi Milita

WASHINGTON — In one final act, the Carter administration has notified Congress it offers to sell Saudi Arabia more $2 billion in construction, technical and other services and parts and supplies to help the Saudi Navy and Air Force.

Congress has 30 days to act on the offer. If Congress does not act, the offer will expire automatically that time.

The sales, disclosed in Pentagon letters to Congress Monday, amount to more than $35.3 billion amount of U.S. arms and related sales to Saudi Arabia, of it in the last seven years. Saudi Arabia is the United States' largest arms customer and a linchpin U.S. strategy in the Gulf area.

The proposed sales do not include equipment such as extra tanks, which would give the fighter planes to be sold to Saudi Arabia longer-range and off-capability. A decision on whether to supply such equipment to Saudi Arabia has been left over for incoming Reagan administration.

From Lifelong Democrat to Republican Right

President Reagan: A Conservative's Odyssey

By Howell Raines
New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — For the tens of thousands of supporters of President Reagan in the nation's Capital Tuesday, the inauguration of the 40th president amounted to more than a change of administration and a shift in political power and the philosophy of government.

For many of them, Mr. Reagan's swearing-in means an end to years of waiting for the triumph of a politician and a conservative cause they have followed with devotion through setbacks and disappointments.

For the Reagan faithful, not even an inauguration upstage by events in Iran could detract from the sweetness of the ceremony that took place on the western side of the Capitol — facing the vast regions from which the president-elect drew both his original support and a set of political ideas rooted in the values of the frontier.

Yet if the inauguration represented the end of a long wait for the Reaganites, it also marked the high point of a political journey that began, by Mr. Reagan's reckoning, over 35 years ago in the unlikely setting of a rented motor boat on Lake Arrowhead in the San Bernardino Mountains of California.

At that time, Mr. Reagan was a newly discharged Army Air Force officer with a head full of troubling political impulses that combined with his lifelong Democratic faith and a heart full of disappointment that World War II had not produced a new age of perfection.

Determination Crystallized

For the 34-year-old film actor, several weeks of soul searching in the mountains "crystallized a determination in my mind," Mr. Reagan recalled in his autobiography. "I would work with the tools I had: my thoughts, my speaking abilities, my reputation as an actor. I would try to bring about the regeneration of the world. I believed should have automatically appeared."

In the years following the Lake Arrowhead experience, the thoughts of the young New Deal liberal hardened into rigid anti-Communism and the conviction that the U.S. government had become the master rather than the servant of the people. His speaking ability came to be regarded, by allies and enemies, as a political weapon of that none of his rivals could match. Mr. Reagan's reputation as an actor provided his entrée to the conservative Republicans, wealthy businessmen and corporate interests who provided his initial power base.

Mr. Reagan's reference to "regeneration of the world" was prophetic, too. For throughout a political career of two gubernatorial campaigns and one half-hearted and two full-scale runs for the presidency, Mr. Reagan clung to a soaring nationalistic rhetoric that other politicians eschewed as too corny for these times.

America was created by "divine plan," he said. Its citizens have a "rendezvous with destiny." Their mission ought to be "to build a shining city on a hill." An electorate pummeled by inflation at home and insult abroad seemed ready to hear that old-fashioned message from a 69-year-old candidate who, as the 1980 campaign began, was widely dismissed as too old and too conservative to win.

Critical Decisions

The age issue appeared a very large obstacle, indeed, when Reagan celebrated his 69th birthday on Feb. 6, 1980, less than three weeks before the first primary in New Hampshire. One opponent for the GOP nomination, George Bush, 56, underscored his relative youth by jogging daily for the television cameras. Another potential rival, former President Ford, captured headlines by declaring that the U.S. people would never elect anyone as far to the right as Mr. Reagan.

Mr. Reagan responded with a series of decisions that proved critical to his eventual victory. First, he shunned the above-the-battle strategy crafted by John Sears, his campaign director, and adopted a grinding schedule that blunted doubts about his stamina. He also set aside another element of the Sears strategy and met his opponents in debates, one of which severely crippled Mr. Bush's effort.

Mr. Reagan went to the Republican National Convention in July assured of nomination, but what was supposed to be a triumphal week actually ushered in the bumpiest period of the campaign. The Reagan team's attempt to get Mr. Ford to accept the vice-presidential nomination by offering him a share of presidential authority raised questions about Mr. Reagan's concept of the nation's Constitution and its highest office.

For a few weeks thereafter, Mr. Reagan lurched through a series of verbal gaffes and misstatements. He insulted some Southerners by confusing the Alabama hometown of the late Helen Keller with the birthplace of the Ku Klux Klan. He was picked in his own state of California for declaring that air pollution was substantially controlled while Los Angeles experienced its worst smog in years.

But as the campaign progressed, a combination of forces — good luck, sound strategy and Mr. Carter's mounting unpopularity — worked to Mr. Reagan's advantage. The electoral landslide on Nov. 4 saw Mr. Reagan carry 45 states. What made this victory all the more striking was that Mr. Reagan won with a political philosophy that many politicians assumed had been terminally discredited in 1964, the year of Mr. Reagan's coming-out as a national political figure.

Committed to Republican Right

Not until 1962 had Mr. Reagan given up his Democratic Party affiliation, but he had not voted Democratic in a presidential election since 1948. In the ensuing years he became increasingly conservative, convinced that the progressive income tax was a Marxist idea and, as a member and later president of the Screen Actors Guild, increasingly opposed to the leftist and allegedly Communist elements that sought control of movie-industry unions.

Moreover, in eight years as the $150,000-per-year public spokesman for General Electric, Mr. Reagan became committed to the anti-government, pro-business philosophy of the Republican right and more and more comfortable with the notion of switching from show business to politics. "As the years went on," he noted in "Where's the Rest of Me," his autobiography, "my speeches underwent a kind of evolution, reflecting not only my changing philosophy but also the swiftly rising tide of collectivism that threatens to inundate what remains of our free economy."

Such sentiments dominated the nationally televised speech that Mr. Reagan made on behalf of the presidential campaign of Sen. Barry Goldwater on Oct. 27, 1964. By that time, it was clear that Mr. Goldwater would lose, but Mr. Reagan was unwilling to believe that simon-pure conservatism was a discredited philosophy.

Mr. Reagan's speech established him overnight as a new leader of the Republican right, a role he nailed down by pledging revenge on those Republicans who had thought Mr. Goldwater an extremist. "We don't intend to turn the Republican Party over to the traitors in the battle just ended; the conservative philosophy was not repudiated," Mr. Reagan asserted just after the election.

Inspired by such tough talk, a group of wealthy Californians formed a committee to draft Mr. Reagan for the 1966 gubernatorial race against Edmund (Pat) Brown Sr., a liberal Democrat. Mr. Reagan suffered a predictable stream of abuse about his theatrical background, but he beat Mr. Brown by almost a million votes. Suddenly, at 55, Mr. Reagan had won his first political race and, in the same stroke, an instant spot on every Republican listing of potential presidential candidates.

Less than two years after Mr. Reagan's election as governor, his supporters mounted an effort to head off Richard Nixon's front-running campaign for the nomination in 1968. Mr. Reagan endorsed their efforts, but he did not campaign actively and ended his candidacy gracefully at the convention in Miami.

Clear Shot Assumed

In 1972, Mr. Reagan did not challenge Mr. Nixon's bid for a second term, on the assumption that he would have a clear shot at the nomination in 1976. But by then, Mr. Nixon had resigned and President Ford was in office. After much agonizing over whether he should challenge an incumbent of his own party, Mr. Reagan ran in 1976, refusing to admit defeat until he went down in a bitter runoff election at the convention in Kansas City.

In a gesture of unity, Mr. Ford invited Mr. Reagan to the convention platform. But Mr. Reagan's speech was not that of a loser who, at 65, was ready to retire.

"We must go forth from here," Mr. Reagan said, "united, determined, believing what a great general said a few years ago. There is no substitute for victory."

As a political general, Mr. Reagan, even in defeat, had a personal army no other Republican could match and, indeed, they went forth from the 1976 convention with a sense of mission.

Mr. Reagan, the former actor who in 1945 decided to try to change the world, did much the same thing. Four years of nonstop campaigning brought him the nomination and the presidency in 1980. As for the content of those speeches, what an admirer, William Buckley, wrote early in Mr. Reagan's career, seemed still to apply on the eve of his inauguration.

"They say that his accomplishments are few, that it is only the rhetoric that is conservative," Mr. Buckley said, "but the rhetoric is the principal thing. It precedes all action, all thoughtful action. Mr. Reagan's rhetoric is that of someone who is profoundly committed, mutatis mutandis, to the ancient ways. His perspectives are essentially undistorted."

The New President

Jimmy Carter and Ronald Reagan, two Americans of humble origins, had coffee together yesterday morning in the White House. And then, at noon, Mr. Carter of Plains, Ga., erstwhile peanut farmer, handed over the presidency of the United States to Mr. Reagan of Dixon, Ill., former movie actor. In almost any other country, the contrast of two men nurtured in simplicity and grown to maturity in nonpolitical careers, turning over the most powerful office in the world, would be remarkable. In the United States, it is not. But neither should it be misinterpreted.

It does mean that one need not be born a patrician, or even to a family of comfortable means, to realistically aspire to the presidency of the United States. It does not mean that anyone, through intelligence and hard work alone, has a chance to be president. Mr. Carter, a man of unquestioned intelligence and an unsurpassed capacity for work, won election four years ago for other reasons — because the Watergate-battered American people responded to his promise of honest, open government. Mr. Reagan, who is widely perceived as neither unusually intelligent or hard-working, defeated Mr. Carter because the nation deemed the Carter presidency a failure and Mr. Reagan promises old-fashioned success for his country.

Mr. Carter did not fail for lack of trying, or for lack of ordering his priorities properly. He failed because he did not do for his overall domestic and foreign policies what he attempted to do in individual cases like energy and the Middle East — organize a consistent and comprehensive approach. He also failed to articulate his policies with sufficient clarity and galvanize the American people behind them.

Mr. Reagan, who is better equipped to mobilize the country behind him, will have to come to grips quickly with the problems of the economy — inflation, unemployment, productivity and international trade relations; the problems of the superpower relationship — arms control, Soviet expansionism, securing energy supplies, relations with sometimes prickly allies and dealing with varied conflicts in the Third World; and he will have to address these problems with sensitivity to the needs of the poor and the old, at home and abroad.

He has the good wishes of the American people and the world as he takes office. Everyone, everywhere, in ways that range from marginal to central, is depending on his success.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

Unscrambling the Egg

Neither triumph nor humiliation; only relief.

The agony ended on tolerable terms. Releasing Iran's assets is not paying ransom. But it does grant a kind of amnesty. It is time to recognize why the end of this debilitating hostage crisis does not liberate the United States or Iran from a maddening mutual dependency.

Nations choose their causes instinctively, from an inner longing and often with reckless disregard for profits and losses. When such causes collide, even without war, the danger to other interests becomes acute. For that reason alone, escape from the hostage trauma should be a blessing for both peoples.

To the extent that the hostages were made to symbolize immutable values — an avenging independence in Iran, a stained honor in the United States — no bargain could ever warrant their release. Yet as their safety was also made to symbolize civility on both sides, they were finally being spared from greater sacrifice. That, too, is a source of relief. And so is the demonstration that shrewd diplomacy, if rooted in powerful political interest, can still unscramble an egg.

American anger had to be moderated by concern for the cohesion of Iran. Iranian ardor had to be cooled by the need for commerce with the West, particularly after Iraq's invasion. Clearly the best way to recover from the actions and retaliations of the past 14½ months was to pretend a return to November, 1979, to release the seized hostages and assets without trying to calculate the damage to either side. Wrath yielded to weariness, and necessity.

The hostage-taking was an outrage, by enraged revolutionaries, a violation of international law by people who felt themselves violated and ill-protected by that law. To understand is not to forgive. It is only to realize that when moralities clash, governments are obliged to fix upon reconcilable interests.

Even a satisfactory outcome cannot validate the tactics along the way. Kidnappers deserve no tribute for choosing not to become murderers. And none of the ayatollah's proclaimed ideals survived the last four months of haggling over gold.

Nor does the final bargain justify President Carter's initial renunciation of both negotiation and force, or his self-serving exploitation of the affair in last year's campaign. Mr. Carter must now share the credit for this resolution with President Reagan, whose calculated threats of unspecified but tougher action gave Iran a further reason, or pretext, for coming to terms. For a new president to be thus credited with toughness should bring relief from the compulsion to prove it in other ways.

However great the relief, there is no cause for relaxation. This affair has exposed deeper problems, about the U.S. stake in Iran and standing in the world. A mature nation will face those problems even though the cruel days for the hostages have ended.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

Israel's Turn

There is a useful symmetry to the process set formally in motion on Sunday by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin to schedule elections in July. It lets Israel select the government they think best suited to the new circumstances created by the changes in Washington, by their experience under Camp David so far and by the deterioration of Israel's economy and morale.

At this point the polls suggest that Labor will win big — perhaps so big that for the first time an Israeli government can ignore the narrowly focused National Religious Party. It could even be that Shimon Peres could form a government without reliance on the party faction led by his rival, Yitzhak Rabin. This would give him unusual real power.

No one who knows Mr. Begin, however, will count him out. The peace treaty with Egypt is his monument. He may turn to his own advantage the international support already evident for Mr. Peres. His resoluteness plays into the national mood of siege.

Many Israelis, despairing of reaching any satisfactory settlement with Palestinians, will listen to Mr. Peres' promise of more purposeful economic management. Others will be drawn by Labor's pledge to attempt within the Camp David context to negotiate a peace treaty with Jordan based on territorial compromise on the West Bank, meanwhile addressing those "Palestinian personalities and bodies who will recognize Israel and reject terror tactics."

Positioning himself for the next phase, King Hussein has stepped up his denunciations of the "Jordanian option" as a Palestinian nonstarter and sellout. Egypt's President Sadat dismisses it as a detour from the Camp David road, and one that leads nowhere. Among Palestinians, however, there is, amid the cynicism about the concept, a lingering curiosity about the terms. This is where Labor's policy will finally succeed or fail.

What Mr. Reagan must do over the next few months is clear: Take his own measured reading of the Camp David autonomy talks. Do nothing to give the United States any larger part than it will have anyway in the Israeli campaign. Use the six-month electoral interval to think out a comprehensive regional policy. And, with the sense of trust and intimacy the United States has always enjoyed with Israel, prepare to deal with whoever wins.

International Opinion

The Whole World Is Happy

Naturally, the whole world is happy that the innocent prisoners of a purely arbitrary regime finally got their freedom. But there is no real reason to be thankful to the ayatollahs, nor to the revolutionaries or whatever they are called in the new Iran. The truth is that a group of mad revolutionaries, supported by the higher clergy, had more power than the civilian government. The government knew the prestige of Iran depended on how quickly the hostage situation was resolved, but it was powerless against the violence of the revolution. After the ridiculous ransom request of $24 billion, the Iranians lowered their price to a more reasonable level. But that does not make the actions of the Iranians any less reprehensible.

ST. PETERSBURG — Mr. Schakoffsky, lately clerk at the Nadejda forwarding office, and another political prisoner hanged themselves in their cells yesterday on account of the awful treatment to which they were subjected by the officials of their prison. It appears that the actual story of the suicide of Baron Boris Korff is that on the first order to fire upon the peasants he hesitated. On the second, he told the soldiers to act, and 12 peasants fell dead. Baron Korff turned on his heel, saying: "This is no work for an officer and a gentleman." He went to his home and committed suicide. Another batch of Jews was shot yesterday at Warsaw.

Fifty Years Ago

January 21, 1931

WASHINGTON — Senatorial inquiry into the manner by which members of the National Law Enforcement Commission issued their joint report on prohibition, made public yesterday, has been proposed as a result of widespread belief that the report was "wet" up to the 11th hour and then made a chameleonlike shift to dryness. The president went out of his way to tell Congress he had no sympathy with the commission's reference to a possible revision of the Amendment if a further trial of its efficacy failed. Meanwhile, President Hoover still referred to prohibition as "an experiment" and counseled "open-mindedness."

China and Reagan: Stepping on Toes

By Yuan Xianlu

PEKING — "If a friend shakes hands with you warmly, but deliberately steps on your toes over and over, can you long stand it?" A young Chinese asked me this while talking about the Sino-American relationship. He used the expression "stepping on toes" to explain his feelings about some U.S. government practices in dealing with Taiwan.

China and the United States extended hands of reconciliation toward each other across the Pacific in 1972. The two countries achieved normalization owing to common efforts. Hence, mutual exchanges and cooperation were strengthened. The Chinese and the American peoples have been enjoying the development of Sino-American relations after a long period of separation. The people of other countries also welcome this since it is beneficial to peace and stability in the world.

Nevertheless, the path of developing Sino-American relations is not all smooth. The main obstacle is the question of Taiwan, which involves Chinese sovereignty and national sentiment.

A Solemn Document

In establishing diplomatic relations, the government heads of China and the United States issued jointly a solemn document — the joint communiqué for establishing diplomatic relations between the two countries. This document stipulated clearly the basic guiding principles of Sino-American relations. It is to be regretted that not long after this, the Congress adopted the Taiwan Relations Act containing many clauses which are contrary to the principles set down in the communiqué.

Thus, the following events occurred in the United States: Though acknowledging the Chinese position that there is but one China and Taiwan is part of China, the U.S. government still tries to regard Taiwan as a country. While recognizing the government of the People's Republic of China as the sole legal government of China, the U.S. government gives the Taiwan authorities official status in a disguised form. Washington admits that the Taiwan problem should be solved by the Chinese people themselves but it frequently makes utterances interfering in China's internal affairs on the Taiwan question.

Though the U.S. government says the Taiwan problem should be solved peacefully, it sells weapons to strengthen Taiwan's military forces. Vice Chairman of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, Deng Xiaoping, clearly pointed this out when he talked with the editor of the Christian Science Monitor, Earl F. Koell. He said: "We are not satisfied with the Taiwan Relations Act. It is this act which brought about the crisis in the Sino-American relations."

Criticism

Some Americans say the Taiwan Relations Act is a U.S. law and no business of the Chinese. Such criticism is beyond my comprehension. It is wrong for China to intervene in U.S. law dealing with domestic affairs, but the Taiwan Relations Act involves matters related to China. In fact, application of this act means forcing on China a U.S. law which violates principles set down when China and the United States established diplomatic relations. Of course, China cannot agree to it. If you deliberately step on someone's toes, how can you ask him to keep silent?

During the transition of the U.S. government, more opinions on China policy were voiced. Different polls indicated that more and more Americans wanted to strengthen Sino-American friendship. But a few stubbornly insisted that they wanted to do all they could to upgrade relations between Washington and Taipei.

There are those who believe that China will accept every U.S. action regarding Taiwan as long as the President Reagan is tough on the Soviet Union. Such a belief is totally erroneous. It's true that while dealing with Sino-American relations, China not only considers them from her national interests but more from the overall strategy of opposing hegemony and maintaining world peace. But precisely because Sino-American relations must be viewed from a global perspective, China cannot but look upon the China policy of the United States as a most important factor in evaluating the strategic measures and foreign policy of the U.S. government. This means that whoever truly fights hegemony must not retreat in their policy toward China. If anyone deliberately damages Sino-American relations, this certainly shows that he lacks a correct strategic point of view and also cannot really play an active role in the overall anti-hegemonistic strategy.

Dignity

One U.S. newspaper even claimed that since China is concentrating on modernization, and being menaced by the Soviet Union, it expects support from the United States. Thus, whatever the U.S. government does about Taiwan, China could only raise some verbal opposition but would finally give in. I'll try to control myself in answering my colleagues on that paper: China is poor now, but it knows very well how to maintain its dignity. The Chinese people have the determination and capability to build up their country and to deal with hostility from outside. We have fought for more than a century for China's sovereignty and territorial integrity. If anyone thinks China will yield on such a fundamental question of principle, they are simply daydreaming.

Now a word on Mr. [Ray S.] Cline's Asian visit. Public opinion in China swiftly refuted his gibberish in Singapore and Taipei. [Mr. Cline, a former Central Intelligence Agency official in Taipei and Washington, is executive director at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies. On his private visit, after the election, he called for appointment of a special U.S. envoy to Taiwan.] The Chinese masses were highly indignant. Many sent letters of protest to newspapers and asked the government to take countermeasures. Only when Mr. Reagan's transition office quickly declared that Mr. Cline spoke only on behalf of himself did the indignation calm down somewhat. If opinions of people like Mr. Cline really become official government policy, Sino-American relations will certainly go into reverse. In dealing with the relationship between the two countries, if the United States intends to retreat to a position it prefers, so will China.

World in Turmoil

Under the prevailing circumstances, we should consider this question more seriously. Mr. Reagan is entering the White House at a time when the world is in turmoil. Aggression and expansion by the Soviet hegemonists gravely threaten world peace. Confronted by such an aggressive hegemonist, it is not enough to face it with the strength of only a single country but to counter it by the united efforts of all countries struggling for peace. Strengthening the Sino-American relationship is one of the most important requirements. The consequences of sabotaging that relationship and changing the existing world pattern are crystal clear to all.

Mr. Reagan's speech on friendly relations between the peoples of China and the United States is encouraging. William Casey, chairman of the president-elect's transition office, made a speech on his behalf on Dec. 4 in New York at a reception in honor of the exhibition on China's economy and trade. He said that "the strengthening bonds of friendship between our peoples are vital to world peace and particularly significant because they represent the spontaneous feelings of our people."

Positive Policy

If this is so, then there are grounds for people to expect that the coming administration will turn down every wrong idea which would damage Sino-American friendship, and will adopt a positive policy toward China, thus enabling the Sino-American friendly relationship to develop further and more smoothly.

I would like to use the expression of that young Chinese to conclude: Stepping on toes, and let us shake each other's hands more ardently.

The American Ailment

By Flora Lewis

in a generation and what went wrong.

The key to all that went before, Mr. Crozier holds, was the frontier, in its metaphoric as well as concrete sense. Until recently, American society was always expanding, in contrast to settled Europe. That left room for waste, for error. What didn't work could be fixed, or dumped and done over. In their adoration of rationalism and science, Americans believed every problem could be solved. It just took time and effort.

He attributes President Johnson's failure in the "War on Poverty" not so much to double demands on the budget and human energy during the Vietnam War as to the "profound connection between two enterprises each of which displayed the same megalomania of abundance and suffered from the same inability to accept the limits of all human effort and the necessity of choosing."

At the Limits

Now, Mr. Crozier argues, the United States is a "completed" country, up against its limits. Now, in his analysis, it has no more margin for the spill that permits infinite optimism and has to face the other, tragic side of the human condition, the pessimistic view that things cannot be fundamentally changed for the better.

Though he doesn't say it bluntly, Mr. Crozier finds the United States handicapped by lack of the complacent cynicism with which the French can say, "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose."

In the French observer's eye, the flaw sapping the energy and ability of the United States to cope with its problems is that it became a "completed" country without a complete world view that accepts the inevitability of bad as well as good in all people and societies.

There's a measure of nonsense and plain error in his analysis. For example, he criticizes the dedication of Americans to their constitutional system as a dogmatic refusal to adjust to changing circumstances, and offers as proof that the United States "celebrates its national holiday on the anniversary of the Constitution." If he ever went to a July 4 picnic, didn't anybody tell him the fireworks were for Independence Day?

But there is also something to Mr. Crozier's insight that American pragmatism has led to excessive reliance on technocrats and on statistical analysis, to the neglect of goals in a sometimes compulsive preoccupation with ways and means. He notes, though with evident misunderstanding of what "due process" is really about, that the task of choosing government's purpose, which properly belongs to the legislature in a representative democracy, have been shifted too much to the courts. And he is right that judges, by definition, are not the best placed to provide the dynamics for society's decisions.

The discontent, lack of initiative, falling productivity, frustration and general malaise stem, in Mr. Crozier's view, from the U.S. failure to admit the guilty knowledge of maturity: that unadulterated good is unattainable. That is why, he says, the United States has changed from a happily confident country into a country plagued and braked by doubt, while Western Europe and Japan have drawn new vigor from past tragedy and are forging ahead.

It's an interesting thought, especially as a new administration sets out with the renewed notion that a certain amount of tinkering will serve to clean up the mess. Certainly, there are limits to what the United States can do, for itself and others, and refusal to acknowledge them guarantees more mistakes and more disillusionment. Cynicism doesn't achieve much, but it takes a tolerance for healthy skepticism to get on in a stubbornly misguided world.

The 52 Hostages: A Group Notable for Its Diversity

By Stephen J. Lynton
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — At 20, Sgt. Stephen J. Lynton was the youngest of the 52 hostages taken.

When he was 17, he joined the Marine Corps and served three years before his capture. He was a high school senior in suburban New York when he was captured. "He wanted to travel," his mother, Barbara Timm, said.

Sgt. Lynton, 64, was the oldest of the hostages.

The State Department vetted Mr. Ode had held posts in 10 countries when he was called back for a temporary consular assignment in Iran. He left his wife, Barbara, and three children in New York, home for Tehran Oct. 3. "He's just out for that kind of thing. He loves people. He loves his work," said his sister, Marjorie Keon.

There were enlisted men and high-ranking military officers, junior consular employees and experienced diplomats. Several embassy staffers had been hostages in Iran before. Michael Metrinko, 33, was briefly held captive while he was the U.S. consul in Tabriz in February, 1979. U.S. Press Attache Barry Rosen, 36, was among those seized when the U.S. Embassy in Tehran was overrun that same month.

After 13 women and blacks were released by their Iranian captors later in November, 1979, two women still remained as hostages — Kathryn Koob, 41, director of the Iran-American Society, and political officer Ann Swift, 39.

There was also one remaining black hostage, teletype operator Charles Jones. Two captive Marines were of Mexican-American descent, Cpl. William Gallegos, 21, who appeared in a controversial television interview in December, and Sgt. James Lopez, also 21. One hostage, communications employee Frederick Kupke, 35, was of American Indian descent.

All but two of the hostages were military or civilian government employees. The other two were Jerry Plotkin, 46, a Los Angeles businessman reportedly trying to set up a personnel company in Iran, and William Keough Jr., 49, superintendent of the International School of Islamabad, Pakistan. Mr. Keough, who previously headed the Tehran American School, was in Iran to pick up school records, according to his family.

According to the State Department, there were 50 hostages at the U.S. Embassy in Tehran and three others held under virtual house arrest at the Iranian Foreign Ministry, including U.S. charge d'affaires Bruce Laingen.

Throughout the protracted crisis, the State Department refused to identify any hostage except for Mr. Laingen.

Nevertheless, the names of many hostages became public. Some hostages appeared in television broadcasts, signed petitions or wrote letters to American newspapers. Some hostages' families appeared at news conferences or spoke openly with the news media. In small towns across the nation, hostages' families became hometown celebrities — a focus of prayers and solemn tributes.

The Washington Post established the identities of the hostages by interviewing their families, colleagues and through other unofficial sources. In most instances, the captives' relatives agreed to talk with The Post. The Post temporarily withheld publication of biographical profiles of the hostages at the State Department's request.

The hostages' ages varied widely, according to The Post's survey. At least 16 captives were in their 20s when they were seized. Twelve were in their 30s. Thirteen were in their 40s, and at least five were in their 50s. Mr. Ode was the only hostage in his 60s.

At least 21 hostages were Army, Navy, Air Force or Marine Corps personnel, according to The Post's survey. These included nine Marine security guards. In addition, at least two nonmilitary embassy employees had extensive prior military careers.

According to The Post's survey, more than 40 hostages began their Tehran assignments after the ouster of Mohammed Reza Pahlavi, the late shah, in January, 1979. One hostage, Marine Sgt. Paul E. Lewis, 22, arrived in Tehran one day before the embassy was overrun, according to his family.

The influx of relatively new embassy employees reflected sweeping changes in U.S.-Iranian relations after the collapse of the shah's regime. The U.S. Embassy's staff had been sharply reduced and many embassy posts were filled on a short-term basis because of continuing unrest in Iran.

Some of the hostages' families had secrets — sensitive personal information that, they feared, might endanger the captives' lives. Some hostages had performed intelligence functions. At least one hostage had close family ties to Iran, and several had studied or worked there while the shah was in power. A few hostages were Jewish, a possible friction point because of Iran's increasingly anti-Israeli stand.

The factors that drew the hostages to Tehran were as different as the hostages themselves.

Administrative employee Steven Lauterbach, 28, had studied French and hoped to get a post in a French-speaking country, according to his mother, Margaret Lauterbach of Dayton, Ohio. Instead, he was tapped for Tehran.

At Consul Richard Queen, 28, chose his Tehran assignment because he wanted to "go to a country in revolution," said his father, Harold Queen. "He wanted to witness history." Mr. Queen was released by the Iranians on July 11 after eight months in virtual isolation, because of illness, dislocated as multiple sclerosis.

Survivors of Ordeal Face Struggle With Emotions

By Thomas O'Toole
Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — They will be as if unaccustomed to light and sound. They will seem preoccupied and distant. Some will be confused and reluctant to talk. Others will have a compulsion to talk. But the talk will be as if it is a compulsion. There will be almost no talk of the ordeal they've been through.

Generally speaking, that's how the 52 Americans who survived the ordeal in Iran will behave in the days immediately ahead. They will disagree on the details of post-captivity trauma. But they will agree on one thing: how well they have suffered enough to be talking with their emotions in the days ahead.

That they are survivors of an ordeal, said Dr. Robert Lifton, a professor of psychiatry at Yale University, "and survivors have to suffer the psychological effects of what it was they survived. They will carry indelible images of what they've been through."

Solitary Confinement

That the ordeal they have been through should not be minimized. 50 men and 2 women held captive by the Iranians until now kept apart most of the time. They were on separate floors, in separate rooms and even in separate wings. Most of the time seated in chairs. One of the two women was confined at least 10 days in solitary confinement. Some of the 50 men were held for days at a time in tiny cells.

When they had to ask to use the toilet, frequently, their request was refused. They were restricted to their quarters, who at times would be asked to conceal their facial features. They were kept in the dark, lot and were forced to sleep on the floor. Their hands were loosely tied. They were taken away. They had to wait until August and none knew when the outbreak of the war between Iraq and Iran. There have been reports they were moved at least twice since the abortive U.S. attempt last April.

When the hostages were finally released, they were brainwashed. They were lectured often on Marxism, socialism, by members of the Islamic Revolutionary Party and on the Islamic Revolution by their more conservative captors. At least two hostages were believed to be Iranian translators at the embassy, released with other Iranian employees later recalled to report on the situation.

When they looked out the window and saw the demonstrators holding a huge banner that said, "We don't want to harm you, we just want to hold a sit-in."

by the People's Struggle Party for just this purpose.

Harvard University's Dr. John Clark, a psychiatrist who has studied cult, hostage and prisoner-of-war psychology, has pointed out that, by isolating the hostages, by keeping them in the dark and by depriving them of sleep, the Iranians followed a practice perfected by the North Vietnamese on American prisoners of war.

A Trance State

"These processes don't lead to the kind of overwhelming terror that might protect the mind," Dr. Clark said. "They lead to a narrowing of attention that brings on a trance state, where everything seems ambiguous. Ambiguity is at the bottom of all this. Suddenly, it becomes impossible for the central nervous system to handle it."

Some hostages were quoted publicly as saying they had been treated well, that their captors were not all that bad. They had nasty things to say about the shah. Psychiatrists suggested these statements were signs that the hostages had undergone a subtle but systematic brainwashing.

What have the 52 hostages gone through? Psychiatrists say that at one time or other all of them may have been struck with such overwhelming anxiety and a fear of the unknown that they began to fear for their lives.

"The fear of death has a bizarre aspect, and often comes with obsessive thoughts like, 'Oh, my God, I didn't pay the insurance bill,'" said Dr. Steven Piezenik, a Washington psychiatrist who is an expert on hostage psychology. "It's a way of displacing our anxieties, but it's also telling us, 'Hey, we're in trouble!'"

The "trouble" phrase quickly passes into a regression phase, which is psychiatric jargon for saying that the hostages suddenly realize they are dependent on their captors for everything, like children depend on their parents. What this does is establish an alliance between captive and captor where the captive loses his personality.

Stockholm Syndrome

On losing his own identity, the captive turns to his captor, an act of re-identification psychiatrists call the Stockholm Syndrome. This takes its name from an incident in 1976 when a woman held hostage in a Stockholm bank vault had sex with her captor and later married him.

The Stockholm Syndrome may account for some of the hostages' saying their treatment has not been all that bad.

The hostages in Iran may have suffered deeper harm to their personalities, in part because of the way their Iranian captors held them captive. They put masks over their faces, kept them in the dark, isolated them from the other hostages. The only noise the hostages heard came from the crowds outside who screamed slogans every day on cue.

Psychiatrists say that all these acts may have served to deepen the anxiety the hostages already must have felt. How deep? It is possible that some of the hostages suffered hallucinations, even psychosomatic pain and illness. There is no way of telling until all 52 hostages are questioned and examined by psychiatrists.

That is part of what will happen in the next few days at Washington where the hostages will probably be kept before being flown to the United States.

Yale's Dr. Lifton said, "Some of them will need no treatment at all, but others may need at least some form of counseling or discussion. One should not assume that all the hostages will be disturbed. They will vary on how they've handled their experience."

A Humiliating Failure in the Desert

Commando Rescue Effort Made U.S. Appear Inept

By Fred S. Hoffman
The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Iran's refusal to free the American hostages led to one of the most humiliating episodes in U.S. military history — the failure of a commando mission sent to rescue them.

When that effort came to a disastrous end in the Iranian desert, the mighty United States looked like a clumsy giant.

That failure stood in stark contrast to little Israel's dramatic success four years earlier in saving some of its citizens from pro-Palestinian terrorists holding them in Uganda.

The United States, which prides itself in technological expertise, was frustrated by mechanical problems.

The mission was scrubbed in the predawn darkness of April 25 because three helicopters had been forced out by malfunctions. This reduced the all-important helicopter force to five machines, one less than the minimum deemed essential for success.

Eight Men Died

Eight American servicemen died. Ironically, they met their deaths after the mission was called off. They were incinerated in a fiery collision between a helicopter and a C-130 transport plane as the expedition prepared to take off from a remote refueling stop. The 90 commandos and 90 air crewmen never got closer than 200 miles to their objective, the city of Tehran, where 53 American men and women had been held hostage since the previous Nov. 4 in the U.S. Embassy and the Iranian Foreign Ministry.

Soon after the mission was aborted, Defense Secretary Harold Brown insisted that "we continue to keep all our options open."

But it was evident that the United States could not try again.

The Iranian militants hurriedly scattered their American prisoners to a number of locations around the country. By any logic, it would be impossible to catch the Iranians by surprise in a second foray.

Secrecy Blown

The secrecy, so successfully maintained by the United States during six months of planning and preparation, had been blown.

In another irony, it appears that the secrecy of which American officials were so proud may have contributed to the failure of the mission. That was suggested by a special panel of active-duty and retired generals and admirals who studied the entire mission from beginning to end.

They blamed zealotism for tight security for the failure to bring the entire strike force together for a dress rehearsal in the United States, for withholding assignment of at least two more helicopters as a margin of safety, and for not sending weather reconnaissance aircraft over the Iranian desert to detect what turned out to be an unexpected heavy dust cloud, which contributed to the helicopter difficulties.

"Many things, which in the opinion of the review group could have been done to enhance mission success, were not done because of strict operations security considerations," the special panel reported to the Joint Chiefs of Staff last August.

In the wake of the embarrassing failure, President Carter said that, in his opinion, "the operation had a very good chance of success." These views were echoed by Defense Secretary Brown and Gen. David Jones, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

But the special panel of senior officers, while obviously sympathetic with their fellow military professionals responsible for planning and executing the mission, undercut Mr. Carter in their report. They cited what they considered key planning flaws and other weaknesses which helped doom the rescue mission.

The U.S. government has made public details only of the first stage of the expedition ending in the desert abort. The investigating panel spoke of the entire operation, which was designed to culminate in whisking the 53 Americans to freedom, as a high-risk operation.

But despite the flaws highlighted by the investigating report, the panel said the rescue mission's concept was valid and that the operation "offered the best chance of getting the hostages out alive [with] the least danger of starting a war with Iran."

In all probability, nobody will ever be able to prove or disprove that assessment.

Two weeks after their capture, 13 of the hostages — five women and eight black men — were freed in what was termed a humanitarian gesture toward oppressed American minorities. They told of the hostages' ordeal: the captives were questioned at all hours by their armed guards, deprived of news from the outside, occasionally blindfolded.

They were bound hand and foot; many were kept in isolation; they had to ask their captors' permission to go to the toilet, to have a drink of water. They were subjected constantly to the din of demonstrators outside shouting "Death to America!"

Altogether, the freed hostages painted a picture of severe psychological and emotional stress that experts believe will have a prolonged effect on the future lives of those who remained captives.

'We Must Act Today in Order to Preserve Tomorrow'

The Text of Reagan's Inaugural Address

The Associated Press
WASHINGTON — Following is the prepared text of President Reagan's inaugural address:

To a few of us here today this is a solemn and most momentous occasion. And, yet, in the history of our nation it is a commonplace occurrence.

The orderly transfer of authority as called for in the Constitution takes place as it has for almost two centuries and few of us stop to think how unique we really are.

In the eyes of many in the world, this every-four-year ceremony we accept as normal is nothing less than a miracle.

Mr. President, I want our fellow citizens to know how much you did to carry on this tradition.

By your gracious cooperation in the transition process you have shown a watching world that we are a united people pledged to maintaining a political system which guarantees individual liberty to a greater degree than any other. Thank you and your people for all your help in maintaining the continuity which is the hallmark of our republic.

The business of our nation goes forward.

These United States are confronted with an economic affliction of great proportions.

We suffer from the longest and one of the worst sustained inflation in our national history which distorts our economic decisions, penalizes thrift and crushes the struggling young and the fixed-income elderly alike. It threatens to shatter the lives of millions of our people.

Labor industries have cast workers into unemployment causing human misery and personal indignity.

Those who do work are denied a fair return for their labor by a tax system which penalizes successful achievement and keeps us from maintaining full productivity.

'Deficit Upon Deficit'

But great as our tax burden is, it has not kept pace with public spending. For decades we have piled deficit upon deficit, mortgaging our future and our children's future for the temporary convenience of the present.

To continue this long trend is to guarantee tremendous social, cultural, political and economic upheavals.

You and I, as individuals, can, by borrowing, live beyond our means for only a limited period of time. Why should we think that collectively, as a nation, we are not bound by that same limitation?

We must act today in order to preserve tomorrow. And let there be no misunderstanding — we are going to act beginning today.

The economic ills we suffer have come upon us over several decades.

They will not go away in days, weeks, or months, but they will go away. They will go away because we as Americans have the capacity now, as we have had in the past, to do whatever needs to be done to preserve this last and greatest bastion of freedom.

In this present crisis, government is not the solution; it is the problem. It is the solution that we are tempted to believe that society has become too complex to be managed by self-rule, that government by an elite group is superior to government of, by and for the people.

Well, if no one among us is capable of governing himself, then who among us has the capacity to govern someone else?

All of us together — in and out of government — must bear the burden. The solutions we seek must be equitable with no one group singled out to pay a higher price.

Our concern must be for a special interest group that has been too long neglected.

It knows no sectional boundaries, crosses ethnic and racial divisions and political party lines. It is made up of men and women who raise our food, patrol our streets, man our mines and factories, teach our children, keep our homes and heal us when we're sick.

They are professionals, industrialists, shopkeepers, clerks, cobblers and truck drivers. They are, in short, "We the people."

Our objective must be a healthy, vigorous, growing economy that provides equal opportunities for all Americans with no barriers born of bigotry or discrimination.

Putting America back to work means putting all Americans back to work. Ending inflation means freeing all Americans from the terror of runaway living costs.

'New Beginning'

All must share in the productive work of this "new beginning," and all must share in the bounty of a revived economy.

With the idealism and fair play which are the core of our strength, we can have a strong, prosperous America at peace with itself and the world.

As we begin, let us take inventory.

We are a nation that has a government — not the other way around. And this makes us special among the nations of the Earth.

Our government has no power except that granted it by the people. It is time to check and reverse the growth of government which shows signs of having grown beyond the consent of the governed.

It will be my intention to curb the size and influence of the federal establishment and to demand recognition of the distinction between the powers granted to the federal government and those reserved to the states or to the people.

All of us need to be reminded that the federal government did not create the states; the states created the federal government.

Before an estimated 100,000 people, and with the Washington Monument in the distance, Ronald Reagan takes the oath of office to become the 40th president of the United States.

So there will be no misunderstanding, it is not my intention to do away with government.

It is rather to make it work — with us, not over us; to stand by our side, not ride on our back. Government can and must provide opportunity, not smother it; foster productivity, not stifle it.

If we look for the answer as to why for so many years we achieved so much, prospered as no other people on Earth, it was because here in this land we unleashed the energy and individual genius of man to a greater extent than had ever been done before.

Freedom and Dignity

Freedom and the dignity of the individual have been more available and assured here than in any other place on Earth. The price for this freedom has at times been high, but we have never been unwilling to pay that price.

It is no coincidence that our present troubles parallel the intervention and intrusion in our lives that have resulted from unnecessary and excessive growth of government.

We are too great a nation to limit ourselves to small dreams. We are not, as some would have us believe, doomed to an inevitable decline. I do not believe in a fate that will fall on us no matter what we do. I do believe in a fate that will fall on us if we do nothing.

So, with all the creative energy at our command, let us begin an era of national renewal. Let us renew our determination, our courage and our strength. Let us renew our faith and our hope. We have every right to dream heroic dreams.

America's Heroes

Those who say we are in a time when there are no heroes just don't know where to look. You can see heroes every day going in and out of factory gates. Others, a handful in number, produce food enough to feed all of us and much of the world beyond.

You meet heroes across a counter — on both sides of that counter. There are entrepreneurs with faith in themselves and an idea who create new jobs, new wealth and opportunity.

They are individuals and families whose taxes support the government and whose voluntary gifts support church, charity, culture, art and education. Their patriotism is quiet but deep. Their values sustain our national life.

I have used the words "they" and "their" in speaking of these heroes. I could say "you" and "your" because I am addressing the heroes of whom I speak — you, the citizens of this blessed land.

Your dreams, your hopes, your goals are going to be the dreams, the hopes and goals of this administration, so help me God.

We shall reflect the compassion that is so much a part of your makeup.

How can we love our country and not love our countrymen? And loving them reach out a hand when they fall, heal them when they are sick and provide opportunity to make them self-sufficient so they will be equal in fact and not just in theory?

Can we solve the problems confronting us? The answer is a unequivocal and emphatic yes.

To paraphrase Winston Churchill, I did not take the oath I have just taken with the intention of presiding over the dissolution of the world's strongest economy.

The Days Ahead

In the days ahead I will propose removing a number of the roadblocks that have slowed our economy and reduced productivity.

Steps will be taken aimed at restoring the balance between the various levels of government. Progress will be slow — measured in inches and feet, not miles — but we will progress.

It is time to reawaken this industrial giant, to get government back within its means, and to lighten our punitive tax burden.

These will be our first priorities, and on these principles, there will be no compromise.

On the eve of our struggle for independence a man who might have been one of the greatest among the Founding Fathers if he hadn't given his life on Bunker Hill, Dr. Joseph Warren, president of the Massachusetts Congress, said to his fellow Americans, "Our country is in danger, but not to be despised of. On you depend the fortunes of America. You are to decide the important question on which rest the happiness and liberty of millions yet unborn. Act worthy of yourselves."

I believe we the Americans of today are ready to act worthy of ourselves, ready to do what must be done to ensure happiness and liberty for ourselves, our children, and our children's children.

'Exemplar of Freedom'

And as we renew ourselves here in our own land, we will be seen as having greater strength throughout the world. We will again be the exemplar of freedom and a beacon of hope for those who do not now have freedom.

To those neighbors and allies who share our ideal of freedom, we will strengthen our historic ties and assure them of our support and firm commitment.

We will match loyalty with loyalty. We will strive for mutually beneficial relations. We will not use our friendship to impose on their sovereignty, for our own sovereignty is not for sale.

To the enemies of freedom, to those who are potential adversaries, they will be reminded that peace is the highest aspiration of the American people. We will negotiate for it, sacrifice for it; we will not surrender for it — now or ever.

Our forbearance should never be misunderstood. Our reluctance for conflict should not be misjudged as a failure of will.

When action is required to preserve our national security, we will act. We will maintain sufficient strength to prevail if need be.

Devlin Reported Stable, Regains Consciousness

United Press International
BELFAST — Bernard Devlin, the Irish civil rights leader and former member of Parliament who survived an assassination attempt last Friday, has regained consciousness in an intensive care unit, relatives said Tuesday.

Unable to speak, the first thing she did was write a note asking about her three children, who were unharmed, and the condition of her husband, Michael, 35, who was also wounded in the attack by Ulster Protestant extremists at their lonely farmhouse.

British soldiers patrolling the area rushed the couple to a hospital for emergency treatment. Doctors said she was close to death Saturday morning, but that her condition has stabilized, although she is still seriously ill.

Three suspects, captured minutes after the murder attempt, are being interrogated by police about it and the shooting deaths late last year of three political activists.

IRA Man 'Executed'

As British Informer

JONESBOROUGH, Northern Ireland (AP) — IRA guerrillas Tuesday "executed" one of their own men, who they claimed became a double agent and betrayed his comrades.

The body of Maurice Gilvary, 24, was found sprawled in a roadside ditch in South Armagh County near the border with the Irish Republic, the police reported.

His head was covered by a sack and he had been shot at close range in the back of the head, a police spokesman said. Mr. Gilvary was a metalworker who lived in Belfast's Catholic Ardoyne district. The IRA's Provisional wing said in a statement issued in Dublin that Mr. Gilvary was shot after "admitting giving information" to police about "Provo" operations, arms caches and safe houses in Northern Ireland for several years.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Richard L. Wilson, 75, former Washington bureau chief for the Des Moines, Iowa, Register, died Sunday. He won the Pulitzer Prize in 1953 for a series of stories revealing that in 1945 the FBI warned the White House about the alleged Communist connections of Harry Dexter White, a Treasury Department official promoted by President Harry S. Truman to be an executive director of the International Monetary Fund.

knowing that if we do so we have the best chance of not having to use that strength.

Above all we must realize no weapon in the arsenal of the world is so formidable as the will and moral courage of free men and women.

It is a weapon our adversaries in today's world do not have.

It is a weapon that we as Americans do have.

Let that be understood by those who practice terrorism and prey upon their neighbors.

I am told that tens of thousands of prayer meetings are being held on this day, and for that I am deeply grateful. We are a nation under God, and I believe God intended for us to be free. It would be fitting and good if each Inaugural Day should be a day of prayer.

This is the first time in our history that this ceremony has been held on the West Front of the Capitol building.

Standing here, we face a magnificent vista, opening up on this city's special beauty and history.

'Shrines to the Giants'

At the end of this open mall are those shrines to the giants on whose shoulders we stand.

Directly in front of me, the monument to a monumental man, George Washington, father of our country. A man of humility who came to greatness reluctantly. He led America out of revolutionary victory into infant nationhood.

Off to one side, the stately memorial to Thomas Jefferson, the Declaration of Independence flanked by his eloquence.

And then beyond the reflecting pool, the dignified columns of the Lincoln Memorial. Whoever would understand in his heart the meaning of America will find it in the life of Abraham Lincoln.

Beyond these monuments to heroism is the Potomac River, and on the far shore the sloping hills of Arlington National Cemetery with its row upon row of simple white markers with crosses and Stars of David adding up to only a tiny fraction of the price that has been paid for our freedom.

Each one of these markers is a monument to the kind of hero I spoke of earlier.

Their lives ended in places called Belleau Wood, The Argonne, Omaha Beach, Salerno and half way round the world on Guadalcanal, Tarawa, Pork Chop Hill, the Chosin Reservoir, and in a hundred rice paddies and jungles of a place called Vietnam.

Under such a marker lies a young man — Martin Treptow — who left his job in a small town barber shop in 1917 to go to France with the famed Rainbow Division.

On the Western front, he was killed trying to carry a message through battle lines under heavy artillery fire.

We are told that on his body was found a diary.

A Soldier's Pledge

On the flyleaf under the heading, "My Pledge," he had written these words:

"America must win this war. Therefore I will work, I will save, I will sacrifice, I will endure, I will fight heartily and do my utmost, as if the issue of the whole struggle depended on me alone."

The crisis we are facing today does not require the kind of sacrifice that Martin Treptow and so many thousands of others were called upon to make.

It does, however, require our best effort, our work and our willingness to believe in ourselves and in our capacity to perform great deeds; that together and with God's help we can and will resolve the problems which confront us. Why shouldn't we believe that? After all — we are Americans.

Theodorakis Protege

Maria Farantouri Wins Own Success

By Harris Livas
International Herald Tribune

ATHENS — Raising the roof at Lycabettus — an outdoor amphitheater on the slopes of a hill opposite the Acropolis — is a phenomenon peculiar to Greece.

While the prestigious summer Athens Festival offers the classics at the Herod Atticus Theater below the Parthenon, Lycabettus has its own festival, usually of lighter entertainment.

The roof-raising happens when composer Mikis Theodorakis or his lead singer for many years, Maria Farantouri, is at Lycabettus. A combination of high political fever, surfacing social grievances and pounding melodies creates a volatile atmosphere, punctuated by the audience's ecstatic shouts, sing-alongs and dancing in the aisles.

For many years, Farantouri sang only with Theodorakis. He discovered her in 1963 when, at age 16, she was singing in a group of students and workers called The Friends of Greek Light Music.

Theodorakis soon was calling her "the perfect interpreter of my music."

"It was good back in the '60s," she recalled, "but just that — good. In the years from '67 to '77, years hard and difficult for our country, I matured as a singer. I learned expression. Then I began to feel I was ready."

During the dictatorship in Greece, Farantouri's name was linked with Theodorakis'. He was arrested in August, 1967. Twenty days later, Farantouri and a group of musicians left Greece secretly and separately. They met again in Paris, and until 1970, when Theodorakis was released, and joined them, Maria and her colleagues kept his songs alive.

He composed in jail on paper napkins and the music was secretly taped and sent out of Greece in the pocket of a foreign journalist. "We sang these songs all over Europe, the Scandinavian countries, the U.S.S.R., two tours through America," Farantouri said. "Our whole idea was to inform the people about what was going on in Greece. We had to make a choro (noise)."

With Theodorakis in command again, Farantouri embarked on a world tour until the junta fell in 1974 and they could return to Greece. Back home, she gradually began testing her wings and by 1977 was working on her own as well as with Theodorakis.

She has become one of Greece's most beloved singers and attracts the same devotion as her mentor. She sings the kinds of songs she sang with Theodorakis: songs of exploitation, of pain and struggle, of unity, of humanity. Although many of her songs are political, she considers them "people's" songs. "A singer must be armed with ideologies," she said, "but love of mankind is the most important ideology."

Farantouri grew up in the working-class Athens neighborhood of Nea Ionia, where she still lives, and she often gives concerts in other working-class districts and in the provinces.

Discovering Brecht

In 1979 she discovered Brecht, and a new Farantouri began appearing. Her usual style is an almost stent presentation, with a minimum of gesture and expression. She is a big woman and she has a big voice. But for Brecht she developed an acting flair to give a special interpretation — sly, tempting, ironic, tragic, pleading, questioning — to each song, depending on the character for whom Brecht wrote the words.

For Brecht concerts and records, she worked with two men from the Berliner Ensemble Theater: Terzopoulos and Henri Kritski. German crowds approved, and she was called "the perfect talent to present Brecht." She appeared with the Berliner Ensemble on its home soil.

Farantouri still sings a lot of Greek music, especially Theodorakis', and has been working with another Greek composer of light music, Manos Hatzidakis. Her 21st album is his latest work, "Melisandre."

On two other recent records she sings protest songs from all over the world.

"It is necessary to protest because of the injustice in our world. I choose to do it with music. The song must make people think. We must face the song with logic and heart. My son, are not all political, but they express the truth about whatever they speak — life's problem, love, social freedom, oppression. They can be erotic, or tragic, beautiful, but never cheap commercial."

She said she wants to press songs in other languages to Greeks as well as take Greek songs to other countries. "I can make the strength of Greek people known all over the world — through difficult music, not the easy, sentimental kind."

Nathalie Baye Shines in Goretta's 'La Provinciale'

By Thomas Quinn Curtis
International Herald Tribune

PARIS — Poor country girls who come to the big city alone are in danger of falling into all sorts of traps. This observation, exposed exhaustively in 19th-century melodramas, is the theme of "La Provinciale," the Swiss director Claude Goretta, remembered for "La Dentellière."

Customs and costumes have changed since 1900 — city slickers preying on youthful, innocent femininity no longer sport waxed mustaches — but the general situation remains unaltered according to the new film at the Marignan, the Elysees Lincoln and the Haute-fille.

The Goretta heroine is not a milkmaid, she is a modern woman. She has been educated as an architectural designer and for a time has held a job in a factory of her hometown in Lorraine. The employment crisis and an itch to explore bring her to Paris. When she presents a letter of recommendation, its caddish recipient makes a crude pass at her and she flees his office in disgust. The indifference of the metropolis is a depressing discovery.

The girl meets and falls in love with a Swiss businessman, but he is married and bound in wedlock by children. Too proud to take a secondary part in his life, she sadly breaks off the affair. A drunken playboy boss promises her a position, but after they make a round of nightclubs he commits suicide. A girl acquaintance who supports herself by high-paid prostitution invites her to a country club where the idle rich idle. She wins an obstacle race on the premises, but haughtily refuses the cash prize, resentful of social inequity. Her future is left open. Will she go home or will she continue to challenge Paris?

Goretta guides the account of a young woman's quest with heavy solemnity. Its incidents are plausible and so are its people, but a soupçon of humor here and there would relieve the gloom narrative. He calls it a "human comedy," but it is persistently doleful, a brooding dissertation on economic privilege, unemployment and women's rights. Theoretically, it strikes the same chords again and again, failing to attempt variations on its main theme that would lend it variety and sharpen its message.

Nathalie Baye's portrayal of the provincial Paris is a bright asset. It has wistful winning charm and suggests the grave wisdom that guides the heroine. Angela Winkler as the girlfriend who profits from loose living performs her more fiery role to fine effect, while Bruno Ganz is seen rather fleetingly as the tired Swiss businessman.

"Histoire d'Adrien" (at the Gaumont Colisée, the Imperial Pathe and the Montparnasse 83) is the first full-length feature of Jean-Pierre Denis and it obtained the Camera d'Or award at the 1980 Cannes festival.

Covering the life of a Perigord peasant boy from his birth in 1903 to his young manhood in 1922, it is spoken in the Occitan dialect of the region, with French subtitles.

Dance

ATER Opens in Reggio

By Brendan Fitzgerald
International Herald Tribune

REGGIO EMILIA, Italy — A program of four ballets, one each by R. George Balanchine and Antony Tudor — both historic names and second forces in 20th-century dance — and by Glen Tetley and Amedeo Amodio, a dancer-choreographer widely seen in Italy, would attract attention almost anywhere.

But what attracted critics from Italy and beyond to Sunday's opening at the Teatro Municipale was the combination of the program; the stars — Elisabetta Terabust, Peter Schanuff and Jay Jolley; and the venue.

Italy's provincial cities abound in beautiful opera houses but Reggio Emilia's handsome theater is the first to reappraise the priority traditionally accorded opera. At the Teatro Municipale dance comes first. It is the seat of a ballet school and company subsidized by an association of theaters of the province of Emilia-Romagna, whence its name ATER. The ATER ballet seeks to change the subjugation to opera and thus spur a renaissance of ballet in the land where it was born.

To judge from the opening performance ATER has a rough row to hoe. There was some superb dancing, but all of it came from the guest stars and most of it was concentrated in one ballet: Tetley's "Sphinx."

Insipid Start

Amodio's "Capricci," created for the occasion, got the evening off to an insipid start. Using a blend of Paganini and Liszt, a vein worked more prosperously 40 years ago by Leonide Massine and last summer by Sir Frederick Ashton, Amodio's choreography was either kittenish or coy, attempting the understated romanticism of Jerome Robbins but revealing the underdeveloped technique and style of most of its dancers.

Tetley created "Sphinx" for the American Ballet Theatre in 1977, and it later entered the repertoire of London's Festival Ballet. Reggio saw a Festival Ballet cast, and it was a remarkable one. The Sphinx was the Italian Terabust, Odipus the Danc Schanuff, while the American Jolley took the part of Anubis, dog-headed Egyptian god of death, for Tetley's libretto blends archaic Greek myth with the symbolism of vision of Jean Cocteau's "La Machine Infernale." Bohuslav Martinu's score is an exercise in tension, with strings accentuating the taut eroticism of Tetley's choreography. The Sphinx has carnal longings and the consequences are fatal — for her. Odipus survives while Anubis, who earlier raged against the Sphinx, resumes his hieratic mask.

The action unfolds before Rouben Ter-Arutman's flamboyant Art Deco plinth, like a winged corner of Manhattan's Chrysler Building, from which the Sphinx surveys the field. The choreography sustains an atmosphere of enigmatic drama, a poetic statement of the famous riddle, yet there is little narrative significance to the movements aside from the frenzied hostility Anubis displays in Jolley's electric interpretation.

Chilling Images

Terabust's performance achieves an almost nonhuman effect, her obsessive attention to Odipus and her last riveting death spasm at his departure, as Anubis dons his dog mask, make chilling images, to which the dramatic muscular force of Schanuff's blend of desire and fear provides an ideal foil. Brown Curry staged the work to perfection.

It fell to Sallie Wilson to set Tudor's probing masterpiece "Lilas Garden

Steel Union Rejects MacGregor Plan

Members of the Iron and Steel Trades Confederation rejected a plan for saving the financially stricken British Steel today, saying they will not urge strike action in opposition to the plan.

The 55,000 members showed 18,392 opposed to the plan, favoring more than half the members did not vote. The plan calls for the scrapping of 20,000 jobs at the state-owned plant closure and the imposing of a six-month pay freeze.

Union leader William Smith admitted the turnout for the vote was low and said the union realized the plan would be pushed anyway. But he said union negotiators would meet with BSC Tuesday to argue their case for an improved pay offer. The organized vote was in stark contrast to the BSC's own poll last Friday among half its 130,000 work force. The poll, covering members from senior management to labor, showed an almost three to one vote for the proposals.

Industrie Pirelli Back in the Black

Industrie Pirelli, the Italian subsidiary of the parent company, returned to profitability in 1980 after an 18.5 billion lire ($19.5 million) loss in 1979, Chairman Leopoldo Pirelli said Tuesday.

The company's 1980 profit, Pirelli said, was a "modest, but still small" profit. Mr. Pirelli told an extraordinary shareholders' meeting, which was called to approve a proposed three-for-seven stock split and a 49.8 billion lire 10-year convertible loan. The Pirelli group, which is controlled by the Pirelli family, has produced better than expected results in the current financial year, despite high interest rates and a difficult cyclical condition.

Only one area of concern was the performance of Dunlop Ltd., it said. The Dunlop group company controlling British and European Economic Community operations, 49 percent owned by Pirelli, was a heavy loser on its tire business.

gram Unit Finds Gas in Gulf of Thailand

NGKOK — Seagram's Texas Pacific Thailand subsidiary said it discovered a significant deposit of natural gas and condensate in the Gulf of Thailand.

The deposit, about 200 kilometers (120 miles) east-northeast of Bangkok, is estimated to have 2 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, bringing to 7 trillion cubic feet the total deposits discovered by Texas Pacific in the area under its concession.

Agreements between Texas Pacific Thailand and the Petroleum Authority of Thailand on the wellhead price of gas have been deadlocked for the last three years. Natural gas is expected to be flowing from the Gulf of Thailand through a network of offshore and onshore pipelines to Bangkok by 1981. The petroleum authority estimated deposits in the Gulf of Thailand at 20 trillion cubic feet.

Sweden's Kockums Plans Work Force Cuts

STOCKHOLM — Plans to cut its work force by nearly one third were announced Monday by the shipbuilding yard Kockums in Malmö, Sweden.

Kockums decided to reduce the total of 4,600 employees by 1,500 by the end of 1982 to save the company from closure, the management said. The yard's 1980 loss was 1.1 billion kronor ($131 million), its record-high loss last year — 580 million kronor ($73 million). It is expected to be matched this year. Union leader Jan-Erik Eriksson said the union had been side-stepped and described the decision as a "betrayal" to the company.

The central government subsidy to Kockums of 1.1 billion kronor, to aid the yard through 1984, will be used up by the end of 1981. In all, the government has granted 1.3 billion kronor in direct subsidies to the shipbuilding industry during the 1970s, in addition to 25.4 billion kronor in government credit guarantees.

Ex Bankrupt; Denied Eurobond Trade

LONDON — Eux, a computerized service for trading in Eurobonds, is into liquidation due to lack of business, a spokesman for the bankrupt firm said Tuesday. Sources said Eux was unable to pay the charges for its IBM hardware.

Mr. Gries, a director, said the firm lost its share capital in two and shareholders decided not to supply more capital. Eux is a joint venture between Luxembourg's insolventcy laws.

The idea of trying to link international bond dealers in the major European financial centers through a computerized information system originated by Luxembourg bankers in 1973. The system started up in 1979 with backing from 80 banks and brokerage firms, but apparently obtained sufficient support from the dealer community. The news by Reuters, which considered developing a Eurobond dealing system, has abandoned the project, at least temporarily, Reuters officials said.

Sweden Sets Record 12% Bank Rate to Save Krona

STOCKHOLM — The Bank of Sweden today increased its discount rate to a record 12 percent Tuesday as it sought to stem the outflow of funds from the country.

The move was part of a package of tighter monetary controls. Officials said the rise from 10 percent, effective Wednesday, is aimed at restricting the amount of money in circulation as Sweden faces a package of serious economic problems, including a large pay imbalance and increasing deficits.

The package raises long-term interest rates from 12.5 to 13.5 percent. It increases the proportion of assets that must be held in cash by commercial banks from 2 to 4 percent.

Lonrho Set Back in Effort To Control Fraser Group

GLASGOW — Sir Hugh Fraser, head of the group owning Harrods department store, today won what may be the final round in a bitter boardroom war against Rowland Rowland, head of the Lonrho conglomerate.

For months, bewildered shareholders have been subjected to a bombardment of circulars from the two sides, vying for control of a chain of stores known as the House of Fraser which owns Harrods, the men's wearers in London's fashionable Knightsbridge.

The financial community has been following every move in the duel between Sir Hugh, who inherited the chain in 1965, and Rowland, chairman of the vast Lonrho Group which is now the biggest shareholder in House of Fraser with a 29.9-percent stake.

Lonrho tried to stop the Fraser Group from selling a store in Oxford Street, D.H. Evans, and then leasing it back again, in a move to gain £25 million in capital for investment.

Just over 71 million shareholders voted by proxy to back the policy against just under 52 million against.

Mr. Rowland, who built up his Lonrho mining and trading empire from a small farming operation in Africa, said Lonrho might sell its shares in the Fraser Group. He said after the meeting that two offers for the shares were being considered, but financial sources said it was too early to judge whether the boardroom struggle was over.

He also did not rule out the possibility of bidding for the balance of House of Fraser shares. Lonrho, though still active in several African mining ventures, lost mining,

Spanish Credit Terms

MADRID — The Spanish Treasury has reached final agreement with a group of 10 banks on the terms of a $500-million Eurocredit, finance Ministry sources said today. The terms are an eight-year maturity at 4 percent over the London interbank offered rate for the first six years, rising to 4.5 percent the last two. There is also an option based at a quarter-point over the prime rate throughout.

Exports Up 29% in '80, Toyota Says

Increase at Nissan Is Equally Large

TOKYO — Japan's two top automakers, Toyota and Nissan, Tuesday announced record exports for last year, with both reporting gains of 29 percent.

Toyota, the leading producer, said it exported 1.78 million vehicles while Nissan's exports rose to 1.47 million units.

The two also reported production records last year with Toyota making 3.29 million vehicles up nearly 10 percent. Nissan produced 2.64 million units, a gain of nearly 13 percent.

Toyota officials said the 1980 increase in exports was a result of depreciation in the yen in the first half of the year and to greater demand for small, fuel-efficient cars. Nissan officials also pointed to rising demand for small passenger cars. Officials at both companies said sales in developing countries made a large contribution to the export rise.

Toyota's exports to the United States last year rose 14.1 percent while Nissan showed a 23.5-percent increase.

However, both companies said December U.S. sales were down sharply with Toyota's exports down 11 percent from the year-ago month and Nissan shipments off 20 percent.

A Nissan official traced the fall to the slide of the dollar against the yen in foreign exchange trading and high U.S. interest rates.

Toyota, however, pointed to an increase in tariff rates for small trucks and a large inventory of vehicles in U.S. showrooms as reasons for the fall in exports.

Brisk demand in Africa, Central and South America and Southeast Asia, Nissan said, helped lift its overseas shipments 3.9 percent from December, 1979. Toyota said overall its December exports were up 1 percent.

Nissan Production Plans

Japan's fourth largest car company, Toyota Kogyo, makers of Mazdas, said 1980 exports were up 20.4 percent to 700,000, with exports to the United States 20.3 percent higher.

Meanwhile, Nissan president Takashi Ishihara said it will not start joint car production in Japan with Volkswagen until mid 1982 at the earliest.

He told a press conference that a joint Nissan-VW group will complete a study by June to decide the type of car and production volume.

On Monday, plans were announced for major investments by Nissan in Mexico and Australia.

The company said it will spend $300 million over the next four years to triple engine production to 360,000 a year at its subsidiary, Nissan Mexicana. The 92.2-percent owned subsidiary produces 160,000 engines in Mexico City.

At the same time, Australian industry minister Philip Lynch announced that Nissan would invest 160 million Australian dollars ($187 million) over the next few years to set up facilities to produce engines for its world car.

Mr. Lynch told a press conference the increase from a planned investment of 100 million Australian dollars, announced last August, included upgrading of existing facilities as well as new projects.

Undergoing Bankruptcy

Mr. Healy said that Chrysler, in effect, was undergoing bankruptcy but with government assistance forestalling a shutdown.

When the new agreement with the Chrysler Loan Guarantee Board was worked out, Chrysler chairman Lee Iacocca said the survival plan would remove about $1 billion of bank debt and help the company find a merger partner.

If this year's U.S. automobile sales total 9.6 million units, Chrysler expects its share to be 860,000, or 9 percent. If that occurs, the company's share would be 860,000, or 9 percent. If that occurs, the company's share would be 860,000, or 9 percent.

Alitalia Strike in 2d Day

ROME — Pilots struck Alitalia Tuesday for the second day in a row of a scheduled seven-day walkout forcing the state-owned airline to cancel all but one international flight and 90 percent of domestic ones.

High P/E Stocks Losing Favor

NEW YORK — Recent downgradings of technology stocks by some analysts and more numerous short-term swings in energy stocks may foreshadow a basic change in market leadership.

The matter goes beyond the sharp price advances that issues in these groups recorded in 1980. A rise in expectations, which accompanied almost automatically by a rise in vulnerability, accounts for much of the weakness.

What investors are willing to pay for per-share earnings is one of the basic measures of expectations. This price-to-earnings ratio was 9.2 at the end of 1980 for the market as measured by Standard & Poor's 500-stock index, up from 7.4 at year-end 1979.

Favored stocks are not back to the glory days of 1972-73, when price-to-earnings multiples of 50 to 100 were numerous, but they have come a long way up from the depths. Most of the names are different, but multiples of the elite "top 50" monitored monthly by Kidder, Peabody & Co. have risen sharply. The Kidder list is culled from NYSE companies with market value of $200 million or more.

Higher Median

A year ago, the companies on that list got there even if their market prices were only 13 times earnings. The most highly priced issue carried a multiple of only 28 at the end of 1979.

By the start of this year, the lowest multiple on the list was 19 and the highest 51. Market valuations on companies in the middle of the Kidder list had climbed to 23 times earnings from 15 a year earlier, a much larger increase than that shown by the S&P price-earnings ratio.

This median multiple of 23 for the top 50 is still well below the peak of 35 set in 1972, notes Kidder analyst Evelyn Feit.

By another yardstick, expectations may be higher than the multiple range of 19 to 51 suggests. Because the price-earnings ratio for the market as a whole has not risen all that much, the premium being paid for the high-multiple stocks is relatively high. For example, the median multiple of 23 is 2.5 times the average market multiple of the S&P. This premium was stuck in the 1.6-1.8 range from 1977 until late 1979. The peak premium in Kidder's trackings was 3.0 in 1972.

Insiders' Choices

Miss Feit calculates that an investor who had switched into each month's favorites since 1972 would have a price gain today of 21 percent, compared with 15 percent for the S&P 500. But an investor who bought and held the top 50 stocks of December, 1972, would have had a price decline of 40 percent, she adds.

If market preferences are swinging back toward big-capitalization blue-chip stocks, corporate officers are not yet going along for the ride. Perry Wyssong's Consensus of Insiders, a service that follows insiders' transactions, says that only one of the 30 Dow Jones Industrial Average component stocks — Standard Oil of California — is among stocks favored by insiders.

"Seventeen are neutral and 12 are showing unfavorable figures by our measures," he says. The 12 are General Motors, Procter & Gamble, American Can, Merck, Du Pont, Goodyear, Sears, United Technologies, Exxon, Johns-Manville, Westinghouse Electric and General Foods.

In the six months ended Friday, he counted 185 sellers and only 17 buyers among insiders of Dow Jones component stocks, an 11-to-1 margin. Early in November, the margin of selling to buying among these insiders was about 8-to-1.

Chrysler Becomes a Remnant of Power

NEW YORK — Chrysler, by gaining formal approval Monday of an additional $400 million in federal loan guarantees, appears to have won another round in its struggle to avoid bankruptcy.

But if the automaker survives — an outcome that is not assured, even with the new, still provisional guarantees, which Congress must approve — it will be a company dramatically different from the industrial concern that it used to be, automotive analysts agree.

Chrysler will, they say, have a permanently reduced work force and a limited product line, specializing in its down-sized "K" cars.

"One of the models which will depend heavily on imported or subcontracted components. The company seems likely, if it survives, to function not as an integrated automotive enterprise but essentially as an assembly operation, the analysts say.

Question of Value

Chrysler might be attractive to a foreign company. Even with the most diligent effort, analysts say, a foreign company could not buy it for less than 10 percent of U.S. sales, so it would have an incentive for as association with Chrysler.

If Chrysler fails, only certain assets would have much value. These include its defense group, which manufactures the Army's new tank, the turbine-powered XM-1; its Huntsville division, specializing in electronic components, and its facilities for making the "K" cars and the Omni-Horizon.

The company's highly automated plant at Newark, Del., and its remodeled Jefferson Avenue plant in Detroit, which Chrysler and United Automobile Workers officials have said is as advanced as any car plant in the world, would also be attractive to other companies, analysts say. The company also has significant Mexican operations that could attract buyers.

Some stocks have experienced a near-explosion in multiples in the past year. Computervision, topping the list at 51 as this year opened, was trading at 28 at the end of 1979. Prime Computer's multiple went to 43 from 21, Rolm's to 40 from 24, Genstar Industries' to 33 from 24, and Helmsick & Payne's to 27 from 16.

If there is a lesson in the Kidder record, it is that the situation can change markedly over time, and this may account for some of the wariness among followers of the favorites.

Bally, for example, had the third-highest multiple — 25 — a year ago; currently it is well off the list, trading at about nine times earnings. Even the recent leader, Computervision, has had its multiple chopped to 44 in recent weeks.

This point is made more tellingly over longer periods. Of the 50 stocks on the list at the end of 1972, only six still qualified at the end of December, 1979. Only six of the 50 stocks of December, 1972, would have had a price decline of 40 percent, she adds.

Analysts said investors were disappointed that President Reagan's inaugural address was not more specific and they were also discouraged that the market did not rally on news of release of the hostages.

Declines led advances by about an 11-to-3 margin among the 1,870 issues traded.

NYSE volume amounted to about 42.1 million shares, up from the 36.4 million traded Monday.

Wall Street still remains disturbed by the Federal Reserve's report last week that the U.S. money supply rose sharply and that yields at the Treasury's weekly auction Monday also were higher.

This means the Fed is likely to maintain a tough monetary stance and keep interest rates at extraordinarily high levels.

There was also concern over what effect the transfer of millions of dollars to the Iranian government to secure the release of the hostages might have on the U.S. banking system.

Money market sources said that a sharp drop in the federal funds rate during the day to a low of 14 percent appeared to reflect some of dislocation caused by the release of Iranian assets. Despite the drop in the rate the Fed did not intervene during the session.

David Willey, New York Federal Reserve Bank vice president, said the transfer of funds to Iran could create distortions in U.S. banks' reserve positions, but that the banks had probably positioned themselves in advance for the transaction.

But questioned about the effect of the transfer on financial markets, Mr. Willey said, "We haven't seen tremendous distortions in the markets so far."

He said the transactions would have the effect of debiting commercial banks' reserve accounts in the United States, but the overall effect on reserve positions is not clear because this depends on the

NYSE Prices Suffer Drop of 20 Points

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange, caught in a downdraft circulating around release of the U.S. hostages and the inauguration of President Reagan, suffered their sharpest fall in more than five weeks in moderate trading.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which fluctuated in a narrow range most of the morning following Monday's 2.30-point loss, was off 20.31 points to 950.68 at the close.

Analysts said investors were disappointed that President Reagan's inaugural address was not more specific and they were also discouraged that the market did not rally on news of release of the hostages.

Contributing to the uneasiness in the credit market was a government report Monday that new housing starts last month averaged a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1,548,000, down only slightly from a revised 1,563,000 units in November. Most economists had expected December housing starts to slip to about 1.4 million units. The higher number, traders worried, might indicate that the economy is stronger than generally had been thought, and that, as a result, credit demand will continue to be brisk.

There was also concern over what effect the transfer of millions of dollars to the Iranian government to secure the release of the hostages might have on the U.S. banking system.

The Celtics, who had the first and 13th selections, traded both choices the day after the draft. The Golden State for Robert Parish, another 7-footer and the Warriors' first-round pick, which came third in the draft.

The Warriors selected Carroll and Utah used the second pick for Darrell Griffith, Louisville's exciting guard, and the Celtics took Kevin McHale, the 6-11 center-forward.

As of mid-month, Parish averaged 16.2 points and a total of 22 shots. Parish was fourth in the National Basketball Association with 124 blocked shots; McHale, averaging 17 minutes a game, was 10th with 87.

Electronic Marriage

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — In our third year of marriage my wife telephoned to ask if I would like to meet her. I did not want to meet her or anyone else. I had been seven years since I had met anybody at all, and though I had recently thought it might do me good to meet somebody — if only to see whether people still looked the way they used to — I did not want to start by meeting my wife.

One of the advantages of electronic living was that you never had to meet your wife.

At the time, of course, I did not intend to marry. I changed my mind only after setting up my tax picture in the computer and discovering that a wife of a certain income profile would cut my tax bill by nearly 2 percent.

It was a simple matter to plug into the central information bank, obtain the names of several thousand single women in the same tax predicament and, for a small fee, have the engagement and marriage arranged by the bank.

The ceremony was performed by a minister of the Ecumenical Computer Church while I was reading the sports news in the electronic newspaper on my video terminal in New York and my bride, who lives in Oregon, was monitoring a Phil Donahue interview with three well-adjusted transsexuals on her cable TV.

At the appropriate moment I punched "I do" and "I will" into my computer, switched into "check-account shopping mode" and ordered my bank to authorize an Oregon jeweler to deliver her a wedding ring.

To celebrate, I put on a video cassette of the Super Bowl game of 1995 and spent half the night watching the Chattanooga Data troupe the Fargo inputs by a score of 35 to 3.

After that I forgot about being married except at tax time, when it was highly convenient. Naturally, it was a surprise when she telephoned to propose a meeting.

I should point out that I did not answer the phone myself. I had not answered a telephone for years. I had a machine that not only answered for me, but also made calls for me. My machine, speaking in a voice entirely unlike my own, said, "I am very busy now scanning my display terminal to select a meal to be delivered to my food slot so that I will not have to be interrupted while watching the cricket test match from Pakistan on my cable television during the evening. Please state your message at the sound of the beep and my machine will process your call."

On this evening the machine said, "Your wife has telephoned to ask if you would like to meet her." "Tell her," I told the machine, "I have not met anybody in seven years and do not propose to start now."

While the machine was transmitting the message, a noise at the door indicated that the central restaurant bank was having my dinner delivered at the food slot.

I went to the slot to collect my dinner. Instead of a steak, I found a small electronic device. "So," I said, "they have finally succeeded in inventing the electronic steak. This ought to teach the beef trust a little humility."

I put my computer in "dining mode." Instantly the TV set activated a video cassette of a 1968 tape of "Bowling for Dollars" and presented me with a fork and a steak knife. The small electronic device spoke up. "Do not carve now," it said. "This is me. I am your wife and I am dying for love. At the sound of the beep, place your computer in 'osculation mode' and activate my 'input' key by framing your lips in the pursed position."

It was my telephone machine that replied, "Don't waste your time, baby," it said. "That bird has been dead for years." It uttered a highly suggestive "beep." My wife "beeped" back.

My wife? But I was married to a tax shelter, not to a flapping beeper. I sat back to enjoy "Bowling for Dollars." The telephone machine said, "If you'd turn off that tube machine, could have a little privacy around here." I turned it off and sat in the dark. The beeping became intense.

China Pianissimo

By Joseph McLellan

WASHINGTON — In 1979 the Washington pianist Gita Karasik invited a friend to her recital in New York. As a result she has just returned from two-week recital tour in China.

The friend was Art Rosen, president of the Committee on U.S.-China Relations, and he explained that he couldn't come because he was entertaining a Chinese delegation. "Bring them along," said Karasik, and Rosen showed up with about a dozen visitors from China.

"After the recital, they came backstage and we talked for a while, and I enjoyed it thoroughly, but I didn't think anything of it until an invitation came to visit China," she recalled. "I accepted on the spur of the moment. By coincidence, the invitation was for a time when I was planning a tour of the Far East. While I was in China, I had a performance and a master class almost every day, with just two days of rest. I had to bring summer and winter clothes, because I ran into temperatures that ranged from 95 degrees in Singapore to 15 in Peking. Japan was freezing, and Hong Kong was tropical. But I have never had an experience like it, and I'm hoping to go back again next year."

Mystical Concept

What she found in China, besides an audience that she wants to visit again, was a taste of what she calls "the expanded moment," a mystical concept with roots in Eastern philosophy: the moment when everything falls into place and time stands still. "It has to do with inner order," she said, "and you can find it in Chinese poetry and painting. I could work on one passage of music 2,000 times to achieve it — and if we reach it once every 15 years, it's enough to keep us going. If anyone has mastered that, it's the Chinese culture; they have understood it and lived it for thousands of years."

This tradition of inner discipline, she thinks, may help to explain the extraordinary playing of some young Chinese in her master classes. "There was a 12-year-old boy in Peking who just knocked me out when he started to play. He played a Weber rondo with a sense of style that was amazing, perfect pace, a completely mature understanding of form. Then a 15-year-old girl got up and played Chopin with the tenderness, fluidity and passion of a true Prole; it would have made Chopin weep."

One result of the trip is that the 31-year-old pianist, who has won half a dozen major competitions and performed with orchestras from the Boston Pops to the Hong Kong Philharmonic, is wondering whether she wants to join the piano list yet.

My teacher, Rosina Lhevinne, wanted to take me into her home when I was 11 and get me started as a child prodigy," Karasik said, "but my father didn't want to. He said, 'Let her be a child.' Then, in the last few years, there has been talk of going with a very large management and getting into the limelight. But since China, I have been wondering: Do I want to do it? There is something very attractive and something very frightening about the thought of doing 175 concerts a year all over the world. It would be great for the ego, but what does it do to the music — or to you?"

The China tour gave her a chance to experience music-making in a new context — free of the pressures and paraphernalia of Western concert life. "You don't have to think about people or influential critics out in the audience," she said, "and you don't run into the kind of preconceived ideas that are a part of performing in Western society. I don't think the audience came in with any a priori feelings about how the 'Appassionata' should be interpreted, and I didn't get the feeling that I had to play the war-horses to keep the audience interested."

"I can remember when I told a former manager that I wanted to end a program with Schubert's Opus Posthumus Sonata, and she said, 'You'll never build a career ending programs with that.' It's a very contemplative work, rich in sound but not virtuosic in its appeal, and it requires enormous concentration from the audience for a long time. The halls were packed — standing room only with people standing halfway down the aisles — but the people were so attentive and responsive you could hear a pin drop. You can take as much time as you want with those audiences; they have a special inner discipline, and I hope that they don't lose it as they increase their contacts with Westerners."

Family Matter

Music is a family matter for the Karasiks, all of whom are or were professional musicians. Gita Karasik's mother, Beren, is a pianist; her brother Michael is a cellist and her sister Eva is a violinist. Her husband, Lee Caplin, is a painter, not a musician, and he also has a law degree. For some time, after she had some unhappy experiences with other managers, he became her manager. "He got me more engagements in two days than my previous manager had been able to do in two months," she says. "Then he became an assistant to Livingston Biddle at the National Endowment for the Arts and he had to stop managing me in the United States because of possible conflict of interest. But he still manages my career overseas, and I have made a Latin American tour and two tours of the Far East in the last few years."

A major influence of her career has been her father, Moshe Karasik, who played viola in the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra for many years under Pierre Monteux. "He brought me to Rosina Lhevinne for training," she recalls, "but he gave me much of my early training himself. Perhaps there is something special about a pianist being trained partly by a string player. He would give me advice based on string bowing techniques rather than the detailed instructions on what to do with this finger and that muscle that you get from piano teachers. Or he would tell me things like '30 seconds before you come to this passage, relax.' I have an interest in Yoga that I got from him, and when I think about a career I always have his advice in mind: 'Find what you love, and do the best you can.'"

PEOPLE: Tipperary Pub Makes A Timely Name Change

The Stars and Stripes is flying over John O'Regan's pub and a 16-foot illuminated sign in Gaelic lettering proclaims the new name over the bar — The Ronald Reagan. The name is in honor of the favorite son of Ballyporeen, Ireland, a village of 200 residents in southwest Tipperary. The new U.S. president's family has been proud of it, even though great-grandfather Michael O'Regan left in about 1849. The house where O'Regan lived has long since tumbled down, but villagers think they have pinpointed the site with the aid of old maps and the recollections of elderly villagers. The faded pages of the local Roman Catholic church register for 1829 records Michael O'Regan's baptism in September of that year. Around the time of the great potato famine he left Ireland for London where the young laborer married Catherine Mulkachy in 1852 — entering his name as Reagan in the Southwark parish register. Two years after the wedding on May 29, 1854, O'Regan's son Thomas was born, the new president's grandfather. The family sailed for the United States in 1858. . . . Like millions of American men, President Reagan has no intention of letting Feb. 14 slip by without the traditional Valentine's Day card for his wife, Nancy. The only difference is that Reagan's sentiments are being published in advance in the Ladies' Home Journal. In what the publication calls one of Reagan's "first acts as president," Reagan pays tribute to "Dear Nancy" in a piece titled "A Valentine From the President of the United States; to the First Lady." It contains such sentiments as: "Because you can say such direct, simple truths in times of confusion and then help us achieve such companionable silence, when the answers start to become unclear to me, because you have defined love to me in wife, life, living and mothering; because of all of this, and so much more, I'm glad that you are, and always will be, MY VALENTINE." The Valentine is signed, "Your husband."
